Synopsis of 'Locked Down'

Frightened and confused Conner Dangerfield wakes up in his prison cell to the sound of a guard's billy club clanking onto the cell doors telling him it's time to wake up. Conner has been placed wrongfully in prison after being accused of murdering a close friend. He is now forced to decide how he will treat life in prison while knowing the person who did this heinous act is still out there.

Seeing a new scared face in the prison cafeteria, Lance Herold, a strong former biker gang member takes it upon himself to give Conner Dangerfield his version of a warm welcome. Making his presence felt and inciting fear into the already frightened eyes of Conner Dangerfield who was preparing to just keep his head down.

Lance Herold wasn't always the large, strong, biker gang member as he is now. He used to be the nice guy always being there for the people around him in his life till that life was abruptly snatched away from him. After that he changed his role in life entirely to become the rude, short tempered, strong man displayed in front of them. Aligned with the other former members of the biker gang, Lance and the others continue to show the prison that they are in charge there and everything runs through them.

While still in prison Conner Dangerfield meets former policeman Larry Duggar who too was sentenced to prison wrongfully. But during Larry's time in prison, he has learned his way around the prison and helps Conner not only with day-to-day life, but also get in touch with people who can help him on the outside. During this operation, both Conner and Larry discover some unforeseen evidence that help both cases that got the two into prison in the first place but involves the biker gang Lance Herold is a part of.

As their investigation continues while inside of prison, a connection begins to be formed between Conner and Larry with Lance Herold. It is discovered that Lance can sneak around the other members of the biker gang and retrieve some pivotal information that will help both with their cases. While this process is going on Lance discovers the true reason as to why he was sentenced to prison in the first place. In the pursuit of retrieving the information, there is nothing that will stop Conner Dangerfield from finding the truth and getting back to his family.
